

XM is a paid service - bottomline. I pay for unsolicited and commercial free radio. So, if they decide to offer weather and traffic, then let them do so. If I didn't like the services I was being provided by XM than I would discontinue being a customer. The FCC and NAB, while needed regulatory groups, are over stepping their bounds for subscription radio. Does the NAB regulate cable/satellite television offering weather and traffic? The last time I flipped on my TV and looked I could get all the local stations and the weather channel - oh and I pay $49.00 a month for this via Time Warner Cable.
